Sam Wootton is a 24 year old fine artist based in both South London and the West Midlands. Having been commissioned by Gucci, i-D magazine and Axel Arigato to create work, and with an exhibition history at both London and Paris fashion weeks, Sam's practice operates at the intersection between fashion, music and fine art. An existing client-base is constituted by creative directors, fashion designers and musicians; Maisie Williams, Sainté, Reuben Selby and Etta Bond are a handful of current owners. Sam's press portfolio is similarly wide in scope, having had works covered by The Face Magazine, Mission Statement Mag, Soft Punk Mag, Fizzy Mag, Tirade World and Dazed, to name a few (See full press portfolio at www.samwootton.co.uk/press). With works previously shown at the London Design Festival, Frieze-funded Factory Project and in publications at the Tate, Sam has built a wealth of cultural capital culminating in his recent full-capacity and heavily sponsored solo show at Forevergood. Conceptually, Sam's work often leans upon artifice as a reclaimed source of pride. We're in an age now where 'real' has fallen through, with the worlds of technology, AI and post-modernism seeping into the cracks. Sam relishes constructing this slow substitution as an act of magic; the future doesn't have to be a dystopian hellscape, but can be conceptualised as an increasingly magical space wherein we can reimagine what it means to be human. There's therefore an optimism at the centre of his oeuvre, setting him apart as the voice of an emerging artistic class.
